

Kåre is a medical doctor pursuing a fellowship in pathology and is currently employed at the Department of Pathology, Rigshospitalet. Alongside his clinical training, he is undertaking a PhD at the Department of Pathology, Zealand University Hospital, where his research focuses on characterizing molecular phenotypes in myelodysplastic neoplasms using multi-omics and deep visual proteomics. Previously, Kåre has contributed to biomarker research in cancer, with projects investigating the growth patterns of colorectal liver metastases and the assessment of HER2-low expression in breast cancer.